Vehicle seats of this kind are typically known as headliner seats and have the task of replacing the old headliner of the vehicle interior in a simple and cost-effective manner, and furthermore of absorbing the forces acting on the vehicle seats and the seat back with respect to the seat frame. The seat shells are preferably constructed from an elastic material, preferably an elastomer, and preferably bonded or otherwise connected to the seat frame. Furthermore, vehicle seats of the kind mentioned in the beginning are typically connected to the vehicle floor with a force fit, wherein the back frame is placed on the floor or the floor mats are connected to the back frame of the seat shell. From patent application DE 10 2006 011 662 A1, a vehicle seat is known which is a generic vehicle seat with a vehicle seat frame, in which the seat frame has a seat back section which is connected, with at least one closing element, to a closing element of the vehicle seat frame, wherein a bolt connection is used for securing the seat back to the vehicle seat frame. The object of the invention is to suggest a vehicle seat which can be fastened on the vehicle in a simple manner. This object is achieved by a vehicle seat as described above and by a vehicle having a vehicle seat as described in greater detail below. An advantage of the vehicle seat according to the invention is that the seat frame is formed as a back plate and that the back frame is fastened thereto. The vehicle seat
